Board of Education President Ninfa Segarra and two other City Hall allies sided with Schools Chancellor Harold Levy yesterday against Mayor Giuliani in the fight over school funding.

Segarra, a former deputy mayor, endorsed a statement, unanimously approved by the seven-member board, denouncing Giuliani's spending plan.

She was joined by mayoral appointee Irene Impellizzeri and Staten Island member Jerry Cammarata, Giuliani's city youth commissioner.

"We are very concerned that the executive budget does not adequately provide for our school system," the statement said.

"The board believes the school system is underfunded at both the state and city levels, and that, without additional resources, the school system will not be able to provide the necessary services to our children."

The statement added: "We support the chancellor in his defense of the system."

Giuliani's press office had no immediate comment when told of the revolt by his allies.

Levy said he was "very gratified" by Segarra's support.

In other matters yesterday, United Federation of Teachers President Randi Weingarten set a June 5 deadline to try to settle a contract with the Giuliani administration. The union will hold a rally outside City Hall today to press its case for hefty raises.
